Parks staff looking for feedback on online registration system

The Phoenix Parks Department is always looking for ways to improve our website and make it easier to use. If you've used our online class registration system, we want to hear from you.

Were you able to quickly find what you were looking for? Did you find it easy navigating through the pages? Did you have trouble establishing your account? What do you like most about the system? The least?

If you have some comments you'd like to share, please contact our Active coordinator by e-mail at parks.registration@phoenix.gov. In your e-mail subject line please add the words Active Feedback.

Newsletter to keep participants informed about classes, programs

Welcome to the Phoenix Parks Online newsletter. We'll regularly be sending the newsletter to all residents who have accounts in our online class registration system.

The newsletter will be a tool to keep you updated on registration dates for popular programs, to provide tips for using our system and to highlight specific classes and programs.

With fall upon us, it's a good time to consider an outdoor program. Don't know where to start? Park rangers are offering more than 100 outdoor programs this fall and winter, many of which are designed to introduce the desert preserves to those new to hiking. There also are fitness hikes for people looking for a workout and dozens of programs great for kids.

To find them in our website you need to explore the Outdoor/Nature Programs section of our online registration system. From the Parks home page at phoenix.gov/parks, click on Classes and Programs to find the All Ages: Outdoor/Nature Programs link.

Rather exercise your mind? There are literally dozens of choices of classes in which you can learn a new skill or improve an existing one. You can explore these classes by age group and program type. For adults, the top three program categories in our online system all pertain only to those classes. Check the "All ages" categories too, which also contain classes that may be of interest.

Stately saguaros, such as this one at South Mountain, are just a few of the wonders you can discover up close on park ranger-led programs.

Lifeguard training classes offered at three sites throughout city

The Phoenix Parks and Recreation Department is offering training courses this November that teach the skills needed to become a certified lifeguard. Participants that successfully complete the class, then pass a certification test over the next few months will be eligible to work as lifeguards next summer, earning $10.48 an hour.

From the Parks Department homepage at phoenix.gov/parks, click on the Classes and Programs link, then click on the Aquatics link. The classes are offered at Pecos, David C. Uribe and Paradise Valley pools.

The two-week classes meet Monday and Wednesday evenings and Saturday mornings for two weeks and are running through January. Those that successfully complete the class will earn a three-year Lifeguard certification and be eligible to apply for positions next summer at city pools. Participants must be 15 years old prior to the last day of class.
